How do I free up space on my computer to install Adobe Photoshop? Step 1: Try using Disk Cleanup If your computer already has built-in tools to free up space, these may work. The Windows Disk Cleanup tool is the first place to look at to see if it can find your Photoshop software. It is found by going to 'settings' and then 'option'. The first option you should check is 'Disk Cleanup'. Then, check the 'files and folders' option in the left-hand column. This tool can also be used for areas of an image that contain detailed information such as jewelry, clothing or other details, by selecting that area and then copying the pixels. The Lasso tool allows you to select regions of an image. It can also be used to draw shapes and to select an area as a selection, which allows you to perform certain functions. The Pen tool is designed to be used as a brush. The precision of the brush and the brush pressure can be adjusted with this tool. The Gradient tool creates different colors or shades with which to paint. Different colors of paint can be applied with different brush widths. The Paint Bucket allows you to paint images. When painting, you select the color you want to apply, and the color is then automatically selected in a blank area. The Smudge tool is used for retouching images, or for enhancing blurred images. The Eraser tool removes pixels from an image, like the Paint Bucket. The Black & White tool is used to create shadows and highlights. Photoshop's painting tools and effects can be used to enhance the color, luminance and details of your images. You can change the color of your images using the Gradient tool. You can adjust the color and brightness of your images using the Hue & Saturation tools. You can use the Dodge tool and Burn tool to lighten or darken details. You can make your images look fake by using the Sponge tool.// -----

After the International Space Station turned the first spacewalk ever made outside the station this weekend, NASA has announced that the first in-flight restart of the Hubble Space Telescope will be scheduled for late November. The Space Telescope got its nickname because it is the first space telescope mounted on a telescope, the former of which was a 40-inch (1.5-meter) ground-based telescope built by William Herschel in 1789. The Hubble was launched in 1990 and was originally designed to keep the video camera looking at a single selected target within its huge field of view while the entire optics were free to look elsewhere. But as its vision was lost to a spectrometer, it had to rely on other pieces of the mission to keep it operating. The space telescope cannot do any repair work itself because of equipment limitations, so it needs to be rebooted in orbit for that. The problems have been sudden and seemingly inexplicable. In one incident, the 'servicer' robot arm got stuck in a high power state for three days. The robotic arm is one of the last pieces of equipment on the ground that actually sends commands into space to direct Hubble. The loss of that connection caused the computer to become confused, and the space telescope has been following its own internal checklist instead of responding to the commands that are supposed to be going out. The problem has been solved by recreating those lost connections. But as it was described by NASA, it is very complex and requires complete control by people on the ground. If something went wrong on the space station, the astronauts would have to be able to manually fix it quickly to keep the space telescope functioning. NASA said it is taking advantage of the six astronauts and one cosmonaut on the station. Normally, an astronaut, cosmonaut or robotics team would bring new pieces of the Hubble back from space. But since this would require astronauts to leave the space station to do that, it was instead decided that the astronauts themselves would do the chore. NASA said it was unable to schedule the in-flight restart of Hubble in 2012 because of other schedules that were made simultaneously with the start of the space station resupply run.

However, it is now free to do so with a turnaround time of about two and a half months. The planned resupply mission to the space station takes about six months.Q: SQL Query for getting the current date, and setting it as a variable from a SELECT
